Tucker Daniels would say he and his cute-but-stubborn sister, Emma, have always been close.

But this is pushing it.

Three years ago, he passed away from a joyride gone wrong during his senior year of high school. Now, since there was something in his eighteen years of skin-walking that he didn't accomplish, he's doing time as a disembodied voice in his little sister's head. This means experiencing menstrual cramps, wearing way-too-tight girl clothes, and sitting through boring calculus classes until he's ready to move on to the next life.

Then everything changes when they overhear plans for a mass shooting.

Suddenly, their yawn-inducing, Tennessee hometown is turned on its head and the more they search for answers, the more terrifyingly complex things become. Working together is their only shot at preventing what could be a murder. South of Heaven is a young adult, suspenseful horror about cherishing life and staring death in the face.
