I was a regular 20 something dude living in New York City in the 1990's when I started this book by doing audio interviews with my father, so I would occasionally smoke some marijuana and drink tequila at that point. But in December 1997, just after Michael Tracy Smith gave me a computer, (the writer) I had the battle maps on the floor of my loft, and then this strange illness happened, that gave me double vision, clay feet, mitral valve infection, incontinence, blindness, constant fever, loss of moustache, loss of hair on the sides of my head, and left me with the inability to drink alcohol or partake in the peace pipe. So from thence on, as the book grew from the initial backbone outline of 200 or so pages, called PHOTOBIOGRAPHY at the time, the next 700 or more pages were written without the influence of any spirits of any kind – totally lucid. I went away twice to die, and being so hideous I moved to Cortland, New York, my alma mater and to Warwick, Rhode Island to finish a book there on my deathbed, hiding myself from my family.

This part of PICTURE WAR will include the battles in the Central European campaign, and shed light on a battle where we actually made war with the Russians (by accident). A battle over the Elbe River which demarcates the border to eastern Europe, and which has been hidden from the annals of World War Two history, for the reason we can't admit that before the Cold War with Russia my father was part of a unit that waged war with the Russians. The Vets have all given up trying to prove that the Elbe crossing happened, the Conference at Yalta with Churchill, Stalin and F.D.R conceded that property to the USSR, but my father has photographed the area, in battle, and this book is out to prove that we did cross the river. I believe it was Patton that told us to cross the river, and so the future can look back on history with 20-20 hindsight because of this book, and maybe the US Government will give a citation for the 83rd Division losses in driving the remaining Nazis into submission – which is what the vets really want.
