The message of the Gospel is a crucial part to a complete understanding of the good news that G-d has given mankind. Within the Gospel, however, there are many doctrinal components that work together to complete this complexity in the Christian faith. A primary component is the act of justification, a culmination of not just the completed work on the cross, but also the covenant salvation history of Israel. Therefore, this paper will present a biblical explanation of justification in order to clarify how this key doctrine relates to the message of the Gospel. In order to achieve this outcome, this paper will begin by first looking at the components of justification. It will define justification in a biblical sense and provide appropriate key passages that highlight this component of the Gospel. The paper will then focus on the Gospel and provide a clear definition, as well as the definition of salvation within the scope of the Gospel. Finally, this paper will compare justification to its role within the Gospel, both on how the Gospel needs the concept of justification and the role that justification takes on within the Gospel, and subsequently, salvation. A brief academic essay.
