The year is 2127. Mack (a contracted problem solver) has just awoken from Hydro-sleep, arriving after a three year trek across our solar system, on an imperative mission to...well, solve one hell of a problem. A satellite orbiting Jupiter's moon Io has intercepted an alarming message, transmitted from a methane-mining colony based upon Titan, the largest of Saturn's 62 moons. For reasons unknown, communication has since been severed with the interplanetary-fuel-producing colony, thus halting humanities reach to untold resources. The slow-burning methane fuel produced on Titan is vital for the mining of distant asteroids and their precious resources, which a war ravaged, ocean consumed, Earth, has become desperately depleted of. Upon arrival of the desolate moon, Mack soon learns that something has been uncovered deep beneath the surface of Kraken Mare (one of the moon's many liquid-methane lakes) that will change humanity forever; finally answering the age-old question... "Are we the sole intelligent life forms in the universe?"
